

Good night my dear SWBF2 Community,

As you might have heard from an announcement posted early today on the BFH server, I have abandoned the SWBF2 competitive scene, this time for good.

Reasons are my own and do not need to be posted here, since that is not what I'm here for. However, there is one last tip I would like to give to each one of you from when I studied for a bachelor degree in Coaching & Human Resources:

“Don't waste your time trying to explain something to someone who has already decided what they want to understand.”

Having said this, I would like to move on and thank each one of you for your time and dedication to this game. After almost 7 years, it is my time to be the one to say goodbye.

I will miss many of you because we are the people we decide to surround us with, and I have let some of you get to know me better, and there are some others that I do feel sorry for not getting to know, as well as, of course, those who do not care, hehe.

I have to admit, it is not easy letting go of this game, but it can be way too life-consuming. As many of you know, I currently work in HR & Operations Direction and after the short break I took due to the pandemic, physical and mental diseases, I feel like it's my time to go 100% back to my working day, as well as move on to different projects.

When I was 18 I had to decide what to study and chose computer science. After 3 years I discovered how much I loved to boost and promote people's talent as well as being part of their development and see how I can have an impact on the entire EMEA market, so I moved to Human Resources while also supporting retail ops.

This is just a way to show you that there's nothing written in life and we are the ones to decide what path we're going to take. My former manager used to tell me “So if we could look into the future we would be rich and no adventures will be there for us anymore”. In other words, take your chances, and if you're not happy where you are, take them elsewhere.

There are some special people I would like to thank for being there every day: Ven, Jadugrid, Inflexible, Obi-Wan, sick (despite wanting to kill him some days), Zemo & Ace.

I really hope you guys do well in your projects and never give up. I'll be here in case anyone wants to drop a friend request and talk anytime.

Here's the link to one of my favorite songs, which fits this moment, from my fav movie OST:

Thanks for all these years,
